Comment:

I like the idea of increasing density in Salem, but I'm concerned with the proposed number of parking spaces. While I approve of the idea of trying a new design philosophy when it comes to housing, I worry that the residents will just clog up the street with their cars. Is there any way to guarantee the residents don't just park on the street? I worry this is just a way for the developer to maximize the returns on their investment while making the current residents deal with all the negative externalities. I would like my guests to be able to park in front of my house, not a couple hundred yards down the way.
